As a company we recognise that the economic recovery is far from over and that currently working in the recruitment industry is certainly not for the faint-hearted. However as the UK economy and businesses begin to climb out of recession Orion Electrotech are confident that 2010 will present a number of potentially lucrative long term opportunities for us as a business and we firmly believe that there is no better time to start hiring and training our next generation of talent.

Orion Electrotech is a well established and highly successful Engineering and Technical Recruitment Agency and we are now interested in talking to candidates with a minimum of 1 year's sales experience preferably within a business to business environment that are now looking for an opportunity to work in this challenging, varied and rewarding industry.

The successful candidate will be able to demonstrate that they are robust, hard working and creative, but most importantly a likeable personality that can appeal to a wide range of people. Whilst it is not essential to have a technical or engineering background the successful candidates must be able to demonstrate a level of aptitude to absorb the associated jargon as this is paramount in ensuring our customers and candidates receive a premium quality service.

The appointed candidates will undertake a comprehensive and full training programme that will embrace all aspects of the recruitment cycle including telephone, face to face sales, client servicing and account management and candidate recruitment techniques.

In summary this is a fantastic opportunity for a successful sales person to break into this rewarding industry and join an ambitious company that will offer you continuous support and comprehensive training throughout your career.
